1. Looking after your tablets & diary

- Please bring this diary and your bottle of dexamethasone and cyclophosphamide tablets with you (even if it is empty) each time you visit the hospital.
- When you have finished a bottle of dexamethasone or cyclophosphamide tablets, you should not throw it away. You should give the empty bottle to your doctor or research nurse.
- If you have finished treatment but still have some tablets left over, please also give these to your doctor or research nurse.

2. Introduction

This guide tells you more about your consolidation treatment in the Cardamon trial. It also contains a treatment diary to record when you take your oral medication (dexamethasone and cyclophosphamide).

You should use the diary section to keep a record of any side effects, symptoms or anything you feel concerned about. At the back of the booklet there is a notes section for you to write any questions you may want to ask your trial doctor or nurse the next time you see them.

3. Frequently asked questions

What if I miss a dose?

Do your best not to forget your dexamethasone or cyclophosphamide doses. However, if you do miss a dose, please record it the missed doses in the notes section of the diary. Do not try to make up for it by taking another dose at a later date.

What if I vomit after taking a dose?

If you vomit a dose, do not take another dose to make up for it. You should record any vomited doses in the notes section of the diary.

What if I take too many tablets?

If you take more tablets than prescribed please contact your doctor immediately.

4. Looking out for possible side effects

Possible side effects

Like all medicines, dexamethasone and cyclophosphamide can have side effects. The more common side effects are listed in the patient information sheet you were given before you registered on to the study.

How are the side effects managed?

Your doctor or GP will manage your side effects according to their nature and how they are affecting you. If the side effect is severe enough to prevent you taking your dexamethasone or cyclophosphamide, your doctor will make sure the problem improves before restarting your treatment.

Recording side effects/ symptoms

At the back of this booklet, you'll find a treatment diary for keeping track of doses and their side effects.

Side effects/Symptoms should be recorded while you are on treatment and for 30 days after you finished treatment. Please remember to bring this booklet with you to your clinic appointments.

5. Dosage tables

There is information on the bottle label of dexamethasone and cyclophosphamide about exactly how and when to take your dexamethasone and cyclophosphamide tablets and your doctor or nurse will discuss this with you in detail. If you are unsure about how or when to take your tablets, contact your trial doctor or nurse as soon as possible.

Your trial doctor or nurse will complete the dosage table below with you. You should then complete the treatment diary in between clinic visits when you are taking the tablets at home.

Sometimes your blood test results may show that taking a drug would not be in your best interests. If your study doctor or nurse contacts you and tells you not to take a particular dose please do as instructed and return the drug at your next visit.
